

Planning Learning Spaces
Christie's Education, Great Titchfield Street, London
Tuesday 15th December 2009

How we utilize the space within our libraries is a critical element to the services that our libraries provide. The ideal of a learning space is constantly evolving and their development in response to the needs of our clients is highlighted through this course. The course aims to not only hear from those involved in the logistical redesigning of their learning environments but also those who facilitate the process of consultation through to design development. With opportunities to discuss ideas with colleagues and speakers as the day progresses, the day should be informative and constructive for those planning redevelopment on a budget.
